

Have We Become Too Ethical?

Managing vulnerability in human subject research

9 November, 2015

University of Sussex Conference Centre, 10:00 - 17:15

Falmer, Brighton BN1 9RH

** Tea and coffee from 9:30

Over the last two decades ethical review by committee has become compulsory for all UK-funded research involving human subjects.

Concern: When is ethics review too constrictive and when too permissive?

Aim: To formulate the basis for feasible, fair and effective ethical review at home and in transnational collaborative research

Speakers:

- Ron Iphofen, Independent Research Consultant
Context is (nearly) everything where ethical review is concerned
- Adam Hedgecoe, Cardiff University
But we don't inject green stuff: harm, risk and the organisation of ethics review
- Peter Pels, University of Leiden
The ethical consequences of management and joint ownership of ethnographic data
- Priscilla Song, Washington University
Incommensurable Ethics: Ethnographic insights on negotiating human subject research between China and the US
- Rachel Douglas-Jones, IT University of Copenhagen
From 'Moral Force' to 'Research Integrity': Building capacity in research ethics across Asia
- Martin Tolich, University of Otago
On the trivialisation of Maori research ethics
- Question Time panel debate with representatives from Wellcome Trust, ERC, ESRC, ASA and BSA

Organised by: Margaret Sleeboom-Faulkner (m.sleeboom-faulkner@sussex.ac.uk), Department of Anthropology in Sussex and Bob Simpson (robert.simpson@durham.ac.uk), Department of Anthropology, Durham. For administrative information: Linda Allan (Linda.Allan@sussex.ac.uk)

* Register now! Go to www.ethics-symposium-sussex.eventbrite.co.uk

www.centreforbionetworking.org for more information

